Thank you for saving and sending, Tom. That seems to have reset things and I was able to open, edit, and save. I tried addressing Jeananne's comments by deleting unnecessary components and making the language less informal, but tried to refrain from editorializing our comments after the fact. Do you think this is on target?

I saved the document, renamed it (adding "tpm" to the end of the filename), opened it without seeing an obvious problems, and am attaching it to this message. If you still have problems, just let me know how I can help.

Tom – I hate to give up on this (in part because I’m really resistant to technology thwarting something that should be so straightforward), but something is up with these documents. I try to save this version from Jeaneanne to edit, and it won’t let me save. When I tried opening the one on SharePoint, my browser crashed again. Would you mind trying? If it doesn’t cooperate for you, either, I’ll try copying and pasting into a fresh document, but I’m concerned something has become corrupted here.

Rosemary,

My comments are included. I suggest that we not send this verbatim, rather we could send the seminole the preliminary info on who attended, our preliminary statements and then followup items. Thoughts?
